MAKING GOOD PROGRESS.

While diplomatic measures are always veiled in profound secrecy, and properly so, there is much evidence that the new treaty which Mr. Alexander may take to Washington will secure the favor of the President. Indeed, we have it on good authority, that the existence of the new measure is due to the American Secretary of State, who pointed out to Minister Thurston that a treaty of annexation, with certain labor and suffrage adjuncts which did not appear in the first document, would find acceptance with the powers that be. If this turns out to be the case, as we believe it will, annexation cannot be long delayed. Indeed, apart from all the circumstances which go to show that Mr. Cleveland is willing to agree and advise the Senate to agree to this particular treaty, it is difficult to see how the United States can take any other mode than annexation to settle the Hawaiian difficulty. A protectorate might be tried, but as the New York Sun points out, that would be annexation under another name. The one fact is patent that America, if she refused the tender of this group, could not justly prohibit its proffer to some other power; and nobody knows better than Uncle Sam what European domination here would mean to his western coast. This is a case where the United States cannot afford to let the chance of annexation pass. Even if Uncle Sam thinks Hawaii a leak he must eat leaks or run the risk of having to eat something else by and by which will be very much less to his taste.

MERELY A BIT OF HUMOR.

And so it was all a joke. That, at least, is Creighton's laughing apology for the Blount inscription. "The cane was presented by me in a joking way," explains the subtle humorist of the Royal cause, "and received by Colonel Spreckels in the same spirit." How contagiously funny the whole thing was the Queen's jester hardly finds words to say, for fear, no doubt, of bursting the waist bands of Minister Blount and others whose names were made to add point and sparkle to the humor of the jocund event. "Don't think for a moment that I was serious," Creighton might have added. "I was merely parading in my cap and bells."

The Royalist Joe Miller further says: "When the news of the 'Murder Society' and the list of doomed men first reached this town it was treated by all the 'victims' as a very good joke. In this spirit four of the proscribed individuals thought that in order to perpetuate the joke and immortalize the stupidity of the writer who proclaimed to the world 'that respectable gentlemen would become assassins because of political differences it would be a good idea to present a cane to Colonel Spreckels by which he would remember the very lame efforts made to terrorize him and prevent him from asserting his ideas and following out the dictates of his conscience.'"

Hear! hear! So then all this fierce invective we have been having in the Bulletin and Holomua against that "Murder Society" is part of the fun? Mr. Creighton's lugubrious remarks to Mr. Spreckels and the ex-Sugar King's white-eyed distress because the good old times when he could walk the streets of Honolulu without fear of assassination were no more—all this was mere persiflage and sport. "I have met the Annexation Club members," said Mr. Spreckels loftily to the assembled donors of the cane "and told them to put their threats into effect, but they have not done so." Still another side splitter! And Bush, too, took part in this screaming farce when he severely denounced the annexationists as men who "dare to threaten to assassinate."

Well, well! Humor like this would be quite worthy of Punch. What a pity that the United States Minister, who was made to figure in the scheme of caccination, should fall so far short of a proper appreciation of it. That must be the one distressful memory about the whole carnival of wit.

Mum: We imagine the misuse of Mr. Blount's name will turn out to be no joke.

Why didn't they cast pearls before Claus Spreckels instead of a cane?

RECOURSE TO FALSEHOOD.

Flounder as they may, the cancan commentators only get deeper in the mire.

The Bulletin has the assurance to say this: While it may have been injudicious to have placed the full list on the cane, instead of merely the names of the subscribers to the gift, yet the inscription did not indicate that the cane was presented by all those whose names were engraved. Neither the word "by" nor "from," usual in such cases, was employed.

Contrast this statement with the words in the inscription which preceded the list of names: "In token of our fraternal affection and sympathy, from your fellow-citizens desirous to die."

One of the most revolting features of the flagrant misuse of Mr. Blount's name by Spreckels' Royalist friends, is the fact that it was made by men to whom the Minister has been invariably kind and hospitable. Scarcely a day has passed without seeing some of these people in his doorway. They have been received by him, in spite of their persistent calling, with unwearied courtesy, and their claims upon his time have been granted a measure of consideration which they had every reason to be thankful for. No gentleman could go much farther than Mr. Blount has done to make them feel at home under his roof—and yet this insult! Esop's viper which the husbandman warned at his hearth was embodied gratitude beside these Royalist serpents who stung the hand that had been so often held out to them in social frankness and confidence.

CHARLEY CREIGHTON says that the cane inscription was all a joke. So it was! Charles ought to stand some where near the American legation and hear the hearty hahaw of Mr. Blount.

DIGNIFIED, wasn't it, for "Liliuokalani R." to head the guffaw list of Creighton's "jokers."

NEWS FROM THE COAST.

A SHIP ARRIVES WITH LATE DISPATCHES.

Ominous Outlook in Paris—Terrible Effects of a Cyclone—President Cleveland Ill.

The schooner Transit arrived from the coast this morning bringing with her copies of the Examiner of July 7th and 8th. We give below a full abstract of their important contents:

BAD NEWS FROM PARIS.

Ominous Signs of a Gathering Revolution in France.

PARIS, July 8, 4 A. M.—There have been repeated conflicts during the night between stubborn mobs on the one hand and the military on the other. The number of wounded was large on both sides. The Place de la Republique presented an appearance which boded ill. A sullen throng gazed through the windows of the Bourse du Travail (Labor Exchange) at the soldiers who occupied it. The Place and Boulevard Magenta were black with people, the crowd numbering not less than 10,000. The boulevard, as far as one could see, was filled with men. The soldiers were still in the barracks.

ERECTING BARRICADES.

Five barricades formed of overturned cabs and omnibuses were erected during the evening at various points in the neighborhood of the Place de la Republique. The most important were in the Place de la Bastille, Rue de Belleville and Boulevard Menilmontant. In the Place de la Bastille an omnibus was burned. The police, backed by cavalry, carried the barricades without difficulty in every case, but used sabers freely. Many revolver shots were fired, and several prisoners had butcher knives.

The number of wounded can only be guessed at. The people do not care how many policemen are wounded and the police take care to suppress news of such cases as much as possible. The municipal guards behaved more roughly than they have done yet. They clubbed refractory rioters with muskets and on the Quai de Valmy, by the canal, they charged with fixed bayonets.

OMINOUS MUTTERINGS.

Fears That Paris is on the Eve of Another Revolution.

PARIS, July 7.—The trouble started by a young woman of light morals at a public ball in limited costume has increased so that no man can measure its gravity. Many cans of petroleum were found at a barricade in the Avenue de la Republique Thursday night. The purpose for which they were placed there is evident. Their bearers would not have hesitated to burn Paris. Some of the cans were brought by women, and the city is reminded that "petroleuses" still exist. It is not surprising that many timid people think the city is to see another bloody revolution.

After the exhibition of force in the Latin Quarter it was to be expected that disturbances would break out elsewhere as Socialists had mixed in disorderly demonstrations since Monday, but it was hardly to be expected on Thursday in the Place de la Republique, where an even greater military force was seen than in the Latin Quarter, and where is the immense new barracks of Chateau-d'Eau. One would have thought that an army prepared for battle occupied the place.

AN ARMY PREPARED.

There are now 30,000 soldiers under arms in Paris. Trouble centers about the Place de la Republique, because the Bourse du Travail (Labor Exchange), a building given by the city to workmen, where seniors meet and organize strikes, is here. The Government closed it on account of the failure of labor syndicates to comply with the law requiring them to register their rules and their officers. Before it was closed labor leaders had denuded, amid long applause, any 200 up by insolence to bring about a revolution they all desired.

Barricades in the Avenue de la Republique on the other hand were not erected by leaders of the violent Socialist and Anarchist groups, who are credited with having 80,000 men in Paris ready to fight to the death for revolution. Although the rioters used firearms freely, they made no serious resistance to the police in spite of the advantages their barracks gave them, and the fact that the cavalry could not give immediate help to the police after the latter had passed the barricades.

One result of the disorders here as elsewhere was the destruction of the kiosks where the fifty odd daily papers of Paris are sold, and which bear the celebrated illustrated advertisements. Lamp posts were twisted at right angles and trees were torn up. A voyage of exploration along here was almost as dangerous for newspaper men after the police had gone away as during their charges. Small bands of marauders sneaked around and committed several robberies unbehindered.

THE ROYAL WEDDING.

Marriage of the Duke of York and the Princess May.

London, July 6.—The marriage of the Duke of York and Princess May took place to-day. The city was gaily decorated and the streets jammed for hours by a loyal but not enthusiastic throng. The Queen rode in the wedding procession and was heartily cheered. She was escorted by the Life Guards, the Royal Horse artillery, the Central Indian Horse and the Bombay Lancers.

At the chapel the service began with a chorale. The responses of the Duke of York were loud and distinct, plainly heard throughout the chapel. Princess May responded in a voice scarcely above a whisper. After the ritual had been said the Archbishop spoke a few words of counsel. He said that one prayer should be that no element of wisdom, charity or righteousness be lacking in their lives.

The Queen was the first to congratulate the royal couple. Then the young peoples' parents kissed the bride and felicitated the bridegroom.

The return procession was very splendid.

A DEADLY CYCLONE.

Terrible Loss of Life and Property by an Iowa Storm.

FORT DODGE, Ia., July 7.—Seventy-four people are dead and one hundred injured as the result of a cyclone which started at Quincy and ended with awful results at Pomeroy last night. At the latter place forty are dead, over a hundred injured and five blocks of residences destroyed. Two hundred families are homeless. An immense amount of damage was done to crops and the path of the storm is strewn with the carcasses of animals.
